Bates selects Lemon Grove resident as Citizen-of-the-Month

Congressmen Jim Bates (D-San Diego) announced his selection of John Cocks as the Forty-fourth Congressional District's Citizen-of-the-Month for June, 1990.

John Cocks, who is 82-years-old - but doesn't look it, has resided in Lemon Grove for forty-two years. John was born in Beaumont, Texas in 1908. He attended Texas A & M University and studied Archaeology. During the heart of the Depression, John wasfortunate enough to be making twenty dollars a day drilling oil in Louisiana.

John is a retired carpenter who began volunteering his time and skills for construction projects at Chollas Lake Park five years ago. John built everything in the park except one picnic shelter said the lake director, "Ranger Dick." He's a super volunteer and a hard worker. At the entrance to Chollas Lake is a colorful redwood sign with hand-routed lettering made by John. He has also built three picnic shelters and, like the rest of the projects, they blend in with the rugged natural beauty of the park. At the entrance to one picnic shelter hangs a sincere message routed in a wooden plaque. "Through these doors pass the greatest people on earth, my friends--J.C."

John also writes poems in his spare time. Below is a poem by John Cocks:

"To those of you who find this corny. I say, rain upon you. To the others blue skies, and green lights. This little moment is addressed to Chollas Lake park and employees especially 'Ranger Dick.' I feel like I am a better person having met, each and every one of you. I believe, things as well as people have personality. Chollas Lake Park, has offered me land, given me peace, tranquility, solace and rapture. Look around you. Mother Nature is at work - from the giant Eucalyptus to the many species of vegetation found on the nature trail, not to mention, the squirrels, bunnies, fowls and owls, all there for your viewing. So enjoy, have a nice day, and may you be in heaven, a week before the Devil realizes you were sick."

John Cocks receiving award from Congressman Jim Bates.

Rock Around the Clock at the Penny Faire

by Lisa Parsons

Berry Street Park was rockin' and rollin' with '50s music and a '50s-style carnival Tuesday. A large crowd of children flocked to the park to try their luck at the Lemon Grove Recreation Department's Penny Faire games, which ranged from "Ring Around the Car" (throwing a hula-hoop around a small plastic car) to the more traditional dart throw. Judging by the amount of lollipops stuck in the mouths of Lemon Grove's youth, one of the more popular games was the "Sucker Pull," where, for only a penny, a child could pull a sucker out of a "tree" and, if it was marked with a red band, win a prize. Recreation Center staff, dressed in '50s clothes, directed all of the games. And the booths, decorated with painted vintage cars, carried out the '50s "cruisin'" theme. The kids got into the decorating act with a visit to the face painting booth and many a parent took home a "tattooed" child.

Food and fun abounded at the Faire, with one of Lemon Grove's favorite bands, the Cat-illacs, who recently were the headliners at Old Time Days, providing old-time rock and roll tunes later in the evening.

Chubb named association officer

Eugene Chubb, co-owner of R.C.P. Co., Inc., Lemon Grove, recently was installed as secretary of the Concrete Masonry Association of California and Nevada.

Installed as president at the association's annual meeting in Palm Springs was Chuck Pratt, sales manager of Calstone, Sunnyvale.

"We expect this to be the 7th straight good year for companies in the association," he says. "And upgrading of building codes, achieved through the efforts of our association, resulted in reinforced concrete masonry structures that weathered the October 17th San Francisco earthquake without sustaining any damage."

The association, composed of concrete block manufacturers in California and Nevada, is dedicated to advancing the cause of concrete masonry products.

Community college district adopts academic and facilities master plans

The Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District Governing Board voted to approve a districtwide strategic academic master plan and a districtwide facilities master plan at a recent Board meeting.

MGT of America, Inc., headed by senior educational consultant Sidney W. Brossman, has been retained to establish both plans based on the following critieria set forth by the district governing board:

1. Academic master plans for Cuyamaca College and Grossmont College.
2. Physical master plans for the two campuses and the East County Performing Arts Center based upon projected growth.
3. Future planning for space utilization, parking, and traffic flow.
4. A sense of community involvement as a result of "planning."
5. Establish a liaison with Sacramento for future facilities planning.
6. The collection of data to assist the development of community usefulness for the District's East County Performing Arts Center.

A fiscal impact of $154,450 is expected in the adoption budget, and MGT plans on working closely with District staff to accomplish their collective goals of better serving the community. Long and short-term analysis will play a big part in MGT's role--as will the collection of demographic data--by providing bases for developing and implementing educational programs and support services for meeting future needs. MGT will recommend changes in curriculum if needed, conduct interviews, meet with the advisory committee, and comment upon issues of participatory decision-making.

A presentation of a final draft of MGT's master plan is scheduled for December 10th.

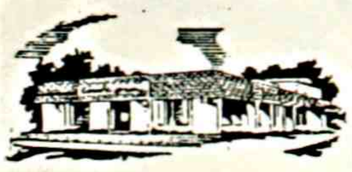

MGT has previously worked with several community colleges, as well as universities, in developing goals and master plans to better serve the surrounding communities.

Red Cross offering disaster preparedness, health and safety courses

After four years of drought, Southern California's brush fire threat is at an all time high. Brush fires erupt and spread extremely fast. Being prepared for emergencies could be essential for you to survive a brush fire. To help you prepare for unexpected emergencies, the American Red Cross offers a variety of disaster preparedness and health and safety courses each month. The following course is being offered during August at the Red Cross East County Service Center, 1283 East Main St., Suite 101, El Cajon.

"Disaster Home Preparedness" promotes awareness of the potential for disasters in the San Diego community, particularly fires, floods, and earthquakes. Students will learn skills to help their families survive during times of disaster. Topics covered will include how to prepare your home before disaster strikes and how to develop a family disaster plan. This one-and-a-half-hour course will be held August 14th from 6 to 7:30 p.m. This course is free. Students are encouraged to purchase the Red Cross "Emergency Survival Guide" for $3.

What children need

by Paul Treske

Children, along with failed savings and loan institutions and stalled budgets, seem to be "in" again according to the media. Although it is sometimes difficult to determine the "ins and outs" due to what seems to be a short national attention span, the needs of children have again risen to the forefront. Drug, physical and emotional abuse seem to be the most easily exploited and understood, but there are more basic early childhood needs which are still only minimally accepted as vital by politicians and the voting public. As a result, children's programs are shortchanged while we continue to argue over "what children really need."

Save the arguments! What children really need is not hard to figure out.

First, children need good pre- and post-natal care. Mothers who understand the needs of the unborn and newborn and have the resources to provide them will, for the most part, produce stronger and more resilient children. With information and help, we can reduce the number of infants born with drug addiction or fetal alcohol syndrome.

That children should have adequate nutrition is a given. However recent studies have shown that a tragic percentage of American children are inadequately fed and sheltered. To expect these deprived children to progress in school or in society at the normal pace is unrealistic. Next, children are profoundly in need of a strong early educational experience. A child who is unstimulated and unchallenged through his/her formative years is not likely to miraculously thirst for knowledge later on. Headstart programs throughout the country have proven the need for early mental, physical and social stimulation.

Finally, a child needs positive role models in the formative years. This may be the toughest problem for too many children and for those searching for solutions. Pre and post-natal care, nutrition and housing, and sound early education are within the grasp of government and the public to produce. But adequate role modeling is primarily the function of parents and relatives. True, there are teachers, coaches, club leaders and friends who can sometimes provide the positive models needed, but too often they are peripheral to the core life of the child.

Too often we despair that anything can be done, citing the family chaos that afflicts too many children. But this should not deter us from resolving the other problems of pre- and post-natal care, nutrition, housing and quality child care.

These should be the birthright of every American child, for without them it won't matter much what kind of role models they have.

From Where I Sit

It was a "Put Up" job

by Frank Andrews

Way back in the "Days of Olde" during my early married life, everybody stored food stuffs like they were going out of style. Going to the grocery store was usually a once a month adventure. Now-a-days the latest generation plan their menu just a day or so ahead and to the supermarket every day they must go.

The phrase "Putting Up" meant canning fruits and vegetables that were in season. I can remember going to the open marketplace just after sunrise to get the farmer's harvest fresh off the vine. It was imperative that the fruits or veggies were canned (Put Up) as fresh as possible.

Some fresh produce could be open kettle processed, some with less acid content had to be cold packed (Boiled in the jar covered over with water for several minutes). Later came the pressure cooking method that took less time. It did require an expensive pressure pot that was known to blow its top once in a while to create some colorful, icicle-like kitchen ceilings.

Besides canning, "Putting Up" also meant preserving or storing other foods for future use. Curing pickles in a huge crock with grape leaves and dill sprigs was a common commodity along with sauer-kraut (shredded cabbage cured in rock salt). While the pickling was going on in the open crocks in the cellar awaiting time for canning, our housed smelled like a "Kosher Deli."

We even rendered down a cut up pig by frying the meat and then preserving it in layers of the hot fat that remained. Watermelons and eggs could be coated with "liquid glass" and kept for months in a cool place, providing us with "Watermelon at Christmas Time." Root veggies like radishes, parsnips, rutabagas, turnips, potatoes, and carrots were stored deep in dry sand for use all winter.

The cool-dry storage area was the cellar (not a basement) directly under the kitchen and accessed through a trap door hidden under a rug on the kitchen floor. A boasting gesture in those days was to take the company (visitors) down to the cellar to show and brag your larder.

The company, especially the preacher from the local church, always left with a couple jars of our favorite jams or jellies - an offering of our love and friendship.

It seems that every spring our cellar would flood from an early thaw and the April showers, leaving a foot or so of unwanted water on our cellar floor. So it was always my job to don swimming trunks and breast-stroke over to the pantry shelves to get some of the goodies for our friends.

So you can see that the seldom-made trip to the store was really just for the staple goods (flour, sugar, salt, etc.) Our perishables such as milk, butter, and eggs were delivered to our door by a near-by farmer.

Food, without any thoughts of calories, sodium, sugar, fat, or cholesterol, seemed to have been much less complicated, but meant more in those days because you "Put It Up Yourself," being careful that nothing was wasted.

by John E. Wirges

Rose by any other name

Pete Rose is going to jail. After years of lying, cheating on his income tax, thumbing his nose at baseball in general and the commissioner's office in particular, Pete Rose was hit with five months at a "near" country club encampment.

Poor Pete. They really laid in on him. Five months! Why, he'll be away until Christmas.

There had been talk that Judge S. Arthur Spiegel was going to send Rose to the Federal pokey in downtown San Diego. The reasoning was to get Rose as far away from major league baseball as possible. The Padres certainly fit that requirement, at present.

There was even talk that Judge Spiegel was going to sentence Rose to manage the Padres for the rest of the 1990 season, but that was rejected under the prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment. You can't do that to a public figure.

Even for somebody like Pete Rose, too much is enough already. After all, he didn't kill anybody. All he did officially was try to hide $354,967.60 in income from the tax folks.

It isn't as if public figures haven't been given the benefit of special "reasoning" when it comes to getting caught with their fingers in the cookie jar.

What ever happened to that Kennedy fellow who ran out on his date after sinking his car at Chappaquiddick? As memory serves me, he didn't even lose his driver's license.

Then there was that poor Ollie North fella. All he did was (allegedly) arrange to provide arms to the Nicaraguan Contras after Congress cut off aid to that revolutionary group in 1984.

North said he was just doing the right thing.

North, a Lt. Colonel in the U.S. Marine Corps was serving as an aide to (then) President Reagan's National Security Advisor, Admiral John M. Poindexter. He reportedly arranged to sell arms to Iran and used the profits to finance his campaign to arm the Contras. Pretty ambitious for a light colonel.

North was tried, found guilty on several charges, and sentenced to a $150,000 fine and 1200 hours of public service in an anti-drug program. His conviction was overturned upon appeal.

Admiral Poindexter was tried, convicted on five felony counts and sentenced to six months in the federal jug, but he too is likely to get his conviction overturned.

Rose chose not to appeal his conviction. He's going to take his five months incarceration like the macho man he claims to be.

Let's see.

Rose will likely be sent to a minimum security Federal Correction Institution. He'll have five months of getting up at 6 a.m., working from 7:30 to 5 p.m. then time to read or relax until lights out at 10 p.m. There will be daily newspapers, television and books and Sunday's free...(sorry).

Compare that to an American fighting man, serving his country. Typically, a young sailor working on a carrier flight deck starts his day at 4:30 a.m., hauling heavy bags of chains, preflights aircraft, services it with fuel and oil, rides brakes on respots for extended operations and stays with the aircraft until flight operations are secured (including night flying).

Every sailor in the fleet faces a similar work schedule, and WestPac cruises last from six to nine months. Some longer.

Yes sir, they really gave it to Pete Rose.

Tough Luck, Pete.

It's The Law

by Jon Wactor, Attorney at Law

Question: I have been dumping used motor oil in an open lot near my garage for several years. I recently heard that used motor oil is considered a hazardous waste. Is this true, and if so, what should I do with it?

Answer: Used oil is considered to be a hazardous waste in California. As such, it must be disposed of properly or recycled.

Each of the millions of vehicles in California uses oil as a lubricant. The oil is changed periodically and becomes a disposal problem of colossal proportions. In 1988, Californians used more than 243-million gallons of lubricating oil. Unfortunately, only 46 percent was collected for recycling. The rest is unaccounted for and most likely was illegally dumped.

California law requires those who produce used oil to manage it properly to eliminate negative environmental impacts. If managed properly, used oil is a valuable fuel source and can also be re-refined, saving money and resources.

Used oil is regulated in the California Health and Safety Code. That Code mandates that used oil "Be managed as a hazardous waste" and prohibits disposing of it by dumping into sewers, storm drain systems, surface or groundwaters, water courses, or marine waters; it prohibits incineration of used oil, deposit on land or use as a dust suppressant or weed killer.

Used oil also is regulated by the California Public Resources Code. The stated intent for this portion of the Public Resources Code is that "used oil should be collected and recycled to the maximum extent possible, by means which are economically feasible and environmentally sound..." State law sets up a program of recycling centers for used oil and allows each individual to dispose of, without charge, up to five gallons of used oil at any one time.

Penalties for improper disposal of used oil are substantial. Civil judicial penalties for intentional improper disposal range from $1, 000 to $25,000 per day of violation. Civil penalties for negligent, improper disposal can also reach $25,000 per day of violation. Daily violations exist for each day the disposal goes unreported to the Department of Health Services. Rather than seek judicial imposition of penalties, the Department of Health Services may also levy its own penalties ranging up to $10,000 per day of violation. in addition to the civil penalties, criminal penalties, including jail time, are also available.

Environmental clear-up costs for improper disposal can run into the millions of dollars. Federal and state laws require clean-up of hazardous waste disposal areas and even of on-going businesses. At the Purity Oil Superfund site in Fresno, for instance, clean-up costs are projected to be at least $55 million.

Used oil is routinely contaminated with long-lived toxic and carcinogenic chemical compounds which are extremely difficult and expensive to remove from soil and water. Environmental contamination can result in clean-up orders from federal, state and local government agencies.

How can one properly dispose of used oil without violating the law? A number of companies will collect used oil and, depending on the market at the time, may even pay for the oil. These companies either re-refine the oil or sell it for use as fuel in a properly permitted facility. Even if an oil user must pay a nominal fee for removal by a legitimate disposal company, these costs are minuscule when compared to the high costs of penalties or clean-up required because of improper disposal.

Looking at the problem from a strictly economic point of view, we can only save money by properly disposing of used oil. In addition, if we throw this resource away, we lose its economic value. Imagine how much longer our oil supply would last if all of the 243-million gallons of oil used in California each year were recycled rather than thrown away.

Throwing it away also means risking substantial legal penalties and potentially astronomical clean-up costs.

Joe Freed on the Movies

This week's movie: Ghost

For a while there I thought Patrick Swayze had brain damage. Just think about it...he began his career with strong performances in "The Outsiders," "Red Dawn" and TV's "North and South," and later had his first huge hit with "Dirty Dancing." After that role he could have done anything he wanted. Unfortunately he chose instead to develop a severe degenerative disease characterized by premature mental deterioration, and starred in the idiotic "Steel Dawn," the macho trip "Road House" and "Next of Kin" which I didn't even bother to see. Flexing more often than speaking, and then only in monosyllables, Swayze was quickly becoming the next Sly Stallone.

It's a good thing "Ghost" came along. Entertaining, sensitive and yes, intelligent, "Ghost" is Patrick Swayze's salvation.

At first glance the story is somewhat like Steven Spielberg's "Always." Two lovers are separated by the male's death, but he returns to Earth as her guardian angel. "Always" developed thematically as a fantasy - the action seen through a dreamlike vision of syrupy sweet romance. "Ghost" approaches the subject as a thriller, developing the conflict between Swayze's need to protect his loved one, and his inability to physically do so. Ultimately, "Ghost's" more abrasive look at the afterlife is superior to the glossy melodrama of "Always." Swayze is excellent as Sam, a perfect blend of masculinity and vulnerability. Since his character is a ghost, incapable of directly interacting with the real world, Swayze's physical prowess is secondary to his romantic ability and emotional intensity. Demi Moore gives her best performance to date as the lover left behind, and Whoopie Goldberg adds the necessary comic relief as Oda Mae Brown, a spiritual link to the afterworld who acts as the messenger for Sam.

Surprisingly, the film is directed by Jerry Zucker, famed Hollywood lunatic who made the wacko flicks "Airplane!" and "The Naked Gun." He handles drama effectively, and still manages to include small doses of his comedic style.

When I saw "Ghost" the theater was jam-packed with people, a sign that the film has a chance at huge financial success. Maybe now Patrick Swayze will realize that he doesn't have to flex for moviegoers to like him.

"Carousel" opens at Starlight Bowl

An American musical theatre masterpiece, Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Carousel," will be presented by Starlight Bowl July 26th through August 12th. This wonderful story is one of Rodgers and Hammerstein's most enduring and endearing contributions to musical theatre.

"Carousel" tells the story of a gentle, shy mill-girl, Julie, and her love for a roughneck no-good carnival barker, Billy Bigelow. Julie marries Billy despite her better judgement and the advice of her best friend. Now married and his wife expecting a child, Billy is goaded into committing robbery to provide for his new family.

Then Billy is caught and rather than face the shame for what he has done, he commits suicide. Years later, he is given a chance to make good for his failures by returning to earth for a single day.

Rodney Gilfry, who received rave reviews as Curly in the Los Angeles Music Center Opera's production of "Oklahoma," will be playing the beleaguered Billy Bigelow.

Soft hearted Julie will be played by Rita Barretta who just finished a production of "Showboat" in Sacramento. Stacey Scotte, who plays Carrie Pepperidge, Julie's more practical minded friend, is a new face at Starlight with solid regional credits to her background.

This production will be directed by Starlights Artistic Directors Don and Bonnie Ward, who have over 40 years of experience in the entertainment industry. Francelle Fuller, who recently received the Denver Drama Critics Circle Award for Best Choreographer of the year, graces Starlight with her choreography for the first time. Lloyd Cooper, conductor, joins Starlight again for this production of "Carousel."

"Carousel" is Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein at their best. It was the second of the string of hits by the famous team that also wrote "Oklahoma!" "South Pacific," "The King and I" and "The Sound of Music." Several of the songs in this musical have become classics American standards including, "June is Busting Out All Over" and "You'll Never Walk Alone."

"Carousel" will run for 15 performances at the Starlight Bowl in Balboa Park from July 26 to August 12. All performances begin at 8 p.m.

For ticket information, including special discounts for students, seniors and groups call (619) 544-STAR.

Box office hours are Monday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday noon to 6 p.m.

Latin American Festival at Bazaar del Mundo

A spectacular profusion of folk art and crafts from Mexico, Central & South America, enticing foods, fiery Latino song and dance and exotic fashions will be showcased at the Bazaar del Mundo's eighth annual Latin American Festival, Friday, August 3, through Sunday, August 5.

Visitors will discover the passion and color of a latin marketplace, as the Bazaar's courtyard becomes a south-of-the-border arena of weavings, ceramics, hand-painted furniture, clothing and jewelry of Mexico, Guatemala, Panama, Peru, Brazil, Ecuador and other Latin American countries.

Free to the public, the event includes demonstrations by noted Mexican artists, brought in especially for the festival, showing techniques handed down from generation to generation.

Showcased will be Manuel Jimenez,--the creator and unchallenged master of the whimsical wooden animal carvings from Oaxaca. An international celebrated artist, Jimenez works with his two son,Isaias and Angelico, crafting a steady stream of work in demand throughout galleries and museums across the country.

Josefina Aguilar, also from Oaxaca, will be present. Copying her father's art form, Josefina creates "monas"--polychrome clay figures -- depicting the rituals of life and death in Ocotlan, her hometown outside Oaxaca City.

Most noted for her "market people," Josefina will show her new "buses and canoes" scenes at the festival.

Renowned for his cheerful Christmas ornaments, Rogelio Nunez from Guadalajara,--the "tin man"--will demonstrate his ancestral craft.

A multi-dimensional folkloric show, Friday and Saturday from noon to 12:30 p.m. will also be presented. A multi-dimensional show of regional costuming, significant art works and folkloric entertainment will be narrated by the Bazaar's Alice Busse. Busse, manager of The Guatemala Shop and Fabrics & Finery Shop, and an expert in Latino folkcraft, will weave Latino traditions and symbols used in the various art forms into the presentation.

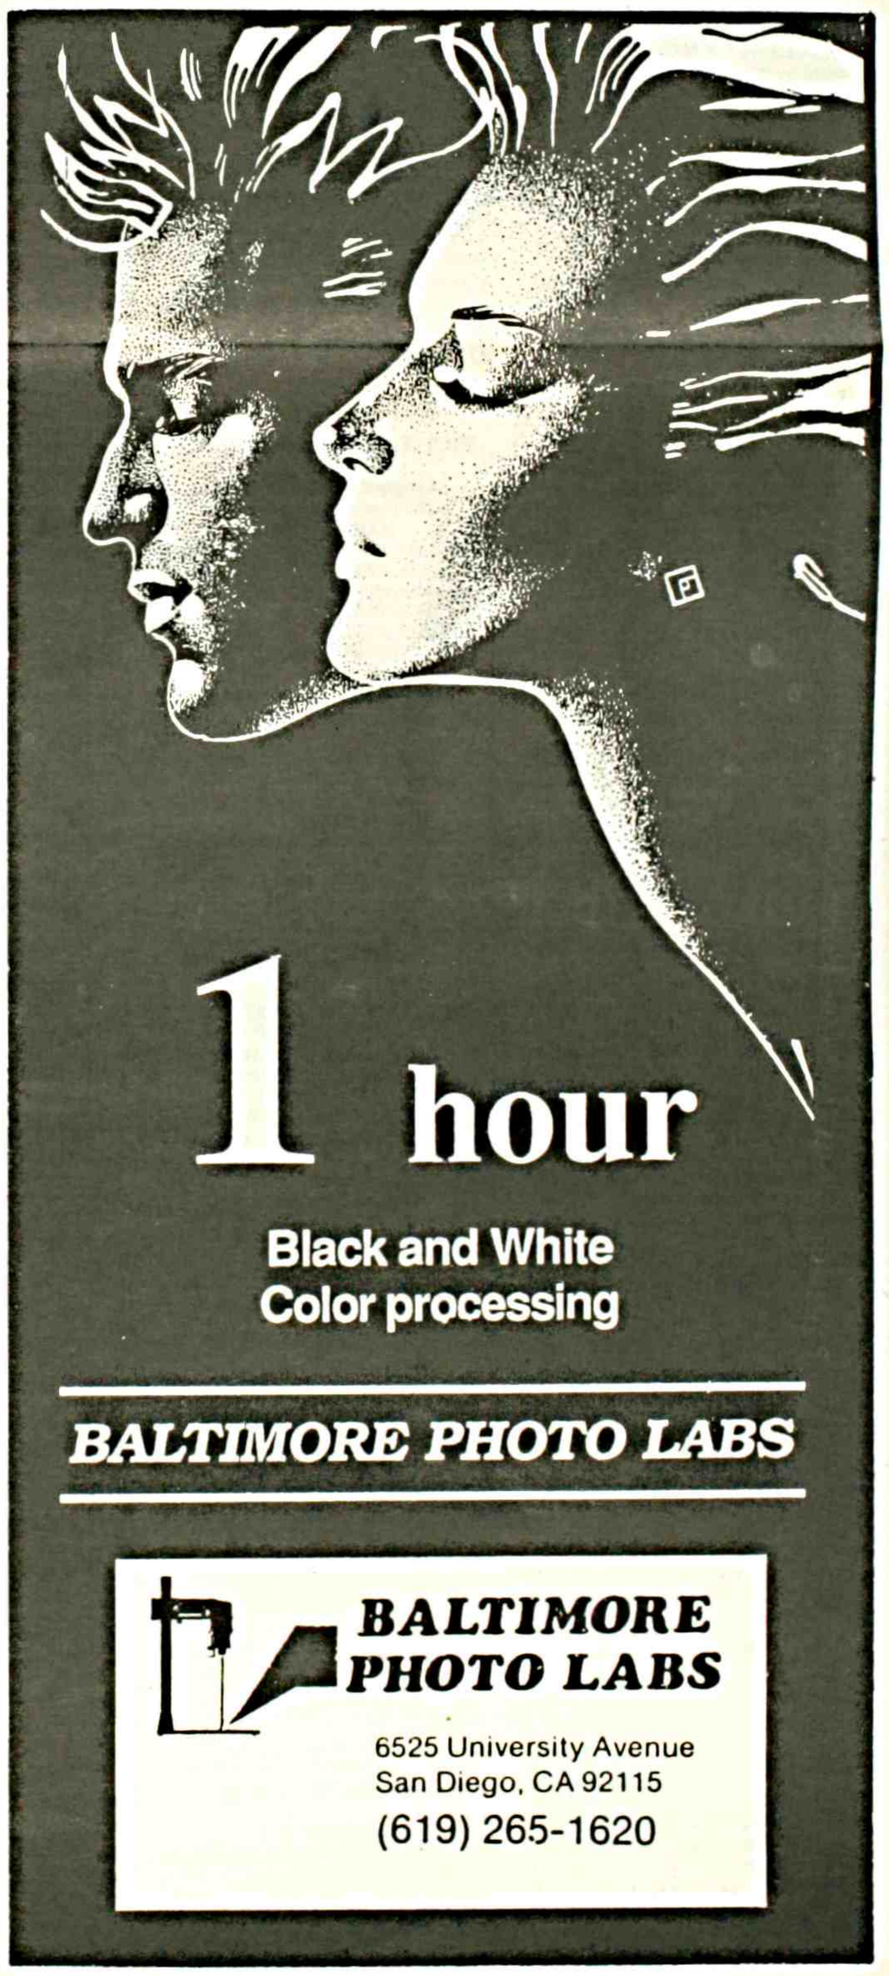

On stage, the Hispanic Mexican Ballet will enchant with skillfully executed regional dances Saturday at 1:30, 2:30 and 3:30 p.m.

Tijuana's popular Kumara will headline Sunday at 1 and 2 p.m. The group's unique South American folk music combines upbeat vocals with pre-Columbian versions of the guitar, pipe, flute and drums to create a distinctive, primitive sound.

Hours of the festival are Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. through 8 p.m. and Sunday, 10 to 5 p.m.

The Bazaar del Mundo is located at 2754 Calhoun Street in Old Town State Historic Park, San Diego.

For more information, phone the Bazaar at 296-3161.

Campaign finance reform needed

To the Editor,

Congress must act to restore public confidence in the election process. This summer, both the House and the Senate have the opportunity to address and resolve the major problems plaguing our current finance system.

The problems are well known, The spiraling costs of campaigns are out of control, increasingly forcing legislators to sacrifice the public interest to special interest fundraising. The average citizen cannot hope to compete for influence with political action committees (PACs) or large political party contributors. The average challenger to an incumbent faces a wall of PAC money and congressional privilege that is discouraging and often defeating. The voter feels he has no voice, and is turned off.

There are no excuses for allowing current campaign finance practices to continue. Congress must enact tough, comprehensive campaign finance reform legislation. Special interest influence from PACs and from big political party contributors must be strictly curtailed. Spending limits are needed to restrain escalating campaign costs. Candidates should receive low-cost broadcast time and reduced-cost postage so that they can get their messages to the voters without being so dependent on special interest money. Small contributions from individuals should receive a tax credit to encourage more voters to participate.

Congress must put its house in order. Politicians of each party will try to point to the other as the roadblock to reform, but the public must demand that real, comprehensive reform be enacted. Congress must stop ducking on campaign finance reform.

Sincerely, Edwina Cisco, President
League of Women Voters

Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA) has positions open

Full-time Vista (Volunteers in Service To America) volunteer positions are available now at United Way of San Diego County.

This is a great opportunity for those entering or re-entering the job market, or for those seeking fulfillment in retirement. Volunteers will learn valuable skills, develop personal contacts and gain knowledge about San Diego's social problems and the services available to meet them.

Vista, the domestic equivalent of the Peace Corps, requires a one year commitment and provides volunteers with a living allowance, life and health insurance, vacation time, and a relocation stipend at the end of the year. The income does not reduce Social Security, veteran's, or welfare benefits.

Extensive training is provided. Minimum age is 18 years. There is no maximum age. Call the United Way Volunteer Center at 492-2090.
